Scientific Interests

Documented experience in the field of chronic liver disease as in both clinical and research aspects. He has studied the biological aspects of therapies to prevent the development of cirrhosis and hepatocellular carcinoma. In particular HCC represents his main field of interest in both clinical and translational research. He has a proved experience in the clinical studies for the validation of biomarkers for diagnosis and management of patients with HCC. He has a large experience in the molecular mechanisms responsible for the progression of HCC and for the identification of new therapeutic targets in preclinical models.
